A total of 6,261 migrant workers in FGV's plantations in Sahabat, Kalabakan and Sandakan Complex in Sabah will undergo the same screening test next week, where 5,959 of the migrant workers are from Indonesia, while 302 are from the Philippines.

Dato' Haris Fadzilah Hassan, FGV's Group Chief Executive Officer said, "This screening test is one of FGV's responsibilities in supporting the government's effort in curbing the spread of the COVID-19 outbreak among migrant workers. It is also to fulfill our commitment in ensuring that all employees who work in our estates have access to health rights during these challenging times of a pandemic."

"FGV has allocated close to RM200,000 to bear the cost of screening tests for our migrant workers who contribute to SOCSO in Negeri Sembilan and Sabah. FGV is also providing temporary COVID-19 Quarantine and Treatment Centres (PKRC) at the plantation complexes to enable the isolation of migrant workers who are found positive with COVID-19 but with mild symptoms, from migrant workers who are tested negative," he added.

If a worker is tested positive with serious symptoms, FGV will manage the worker's quarantine and meals until aid arrives from the Ministry of Health (MoH) to assist with further treatment in hospital.

The COVID-19 screening test through SOCSO is a mandatory requirement to be adhered by employers who employ migrant workers at high-risk areas specifically in Selangor, Negeri Sembilan, Penang, Sabah, Kuala Lumpur and Labuan starting from 1 December 2020.
